

The Super Psychic Children

I have held this story back from printing for some time.

The children's abilities sounded so unbelievable even to my open mind.

UNTIL!

I suggest you read this story of extreme "psychic" ability.

Think about it. You'll probably feel like I did...want to believe but...

And then, ONLY THEN....turn the page and read the story on page 18.

I wonder if you'll still think it's unbelievable!

It's made me think Mike the Ed

Since 1974 stories have been coming out of China about a race of "Super Psychic Children".

The Chinese government claims that these children, when blindfolded, can see either with their ears, nose, mouth, tongue, armpits, hands or feet.

Each child was different and their vision from these unusual areas was said to equal.

What is so amazing of all is that it is real, these children are able to demonstrate that whatever they think becomes reality.

UK and world journalists from such prestigious publications as Nature were invited to visit China to observe some of these children.

When they were invited to test the children, they conducted their examinations in a way that ruled out any possible cheating. They left nothing to chance.

In one test the journalists took a pile of books and chose one of them, then opened the book at random and ripped out a page, crumpling it up into a small ball.

This ball was then placed in the armpit of one of these children, who was able to read every word on the page perfectly!

Many more tests were carried out. Their report, subsequently issued, concluded the phenomenon is indeed real.

According to Paul Dong in "China's Super Psychics", seeing with various parts of the body was the psychic ability that caught the attention of the Chinese government, but this ability was quickly understood to be only the tip of the iceberg.

These children began to demonstrate other psychic abilities that are difficult to understand.

Mr. Dong reports how several thousand people would enter the auditorium and be handed a live rosebud.

When everyone was seated and quiet, the demonstration would begin with a young Chinese girl, about 6 years old, who would come on stage all by herself and stand in the centre facing the audience.

Then with a silent wave of her hand, the thousand rosebuds would slowly open into full-blown roses before the eyes of the astonished audience.

Mr. Dong also speaks of how more than 5,000 young children have demonstrated in public another amazing feat.

One child would take a sealed bottle of pills off a shelf at random, like vitamin pills, for example.

The bottle would be sealed with the original plastic wrap and have a tightly screwed metal or plastic top.

The bottle would then be placed in the centre of a large bare table. Then a video camera would observe what happened next.

The child would say to the audience that they were beginning, but nothing was visible to the audience.

Suddenly, the pills inside the sealed bottle would pass right through the glass and appear on the table.

The child would then take another object, such as a coin, set it on the table, and it would pass into the sealed bottle.

These are a sample of psychic abilities that have been demonstrated in China, according to this book

For the first 10 years the Chinese government would not believe it, until the number of these children who could do these things kept growing.

By the time China's Super Psychics was released, the Chinese government had identified more than 100,000 of these children.

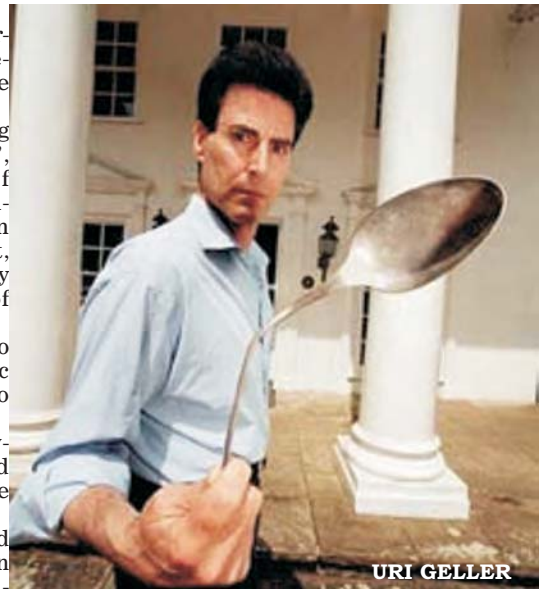

The government and the Chinese scientific community simply had to admit it was true.

Because they realized what this could mean, the government set up training schools to assist these children in their psychic abilities.

Whenever a psychic child is found now, he or she is sent to one of these schools.

The Chinese authorities have also found that they can even take children who are not known to be psychics, and in the presence of the naturally psychic kids, the normal children can perform the same wonderful feats.

Uri Geller, the psychic from Israel was another who could bend metal objects just by looking at them.

URI GELLER

AND CLOSER TO HOME

In his book, Uri Geller, My Story, Uri tells of when he went on TV and asked people to get knives, spoons and forks and place them in front of the television set.

With millions of witnesses, he then bent the tableware before their eyes.

In the light of the Chinese experience, this act had an interesting side effect.

From the phone calls after the show it was discovered that more than 1,500 children were able to do the same thing just by seeing it happen one time.

They could all bend the metal tableware with their minds.

SCIENTIFIC TESTS THIS TIME!

Asked if he would submit his magic to scientific scrutiny, Mr. Geller agreed.

For a period of time Mr. Geller did whatever Stanford Research Institute asked him to do to prove once and for all that his psychic ability was not a trick

One of the tests Uri was in a sealed steel room, which was also a Faraday cage...a room where electromagnetic fields, such as radio waves and even brain waves or thoughts, could not pass through the walls.

HE WAS SEALED IN PHYSICALLY, AS WELL AS ENERGETICALLY.

The Stanford researchers placed outside the test chamber a sealed, hand-blown glass tube that was twisted on each end so that it could not be opened without breaking it.

Inside it was a piece of the hardest metal known to man.

With all their scientific instruments recording the test, Stanford scientists watched in total amazement as Uri bent the piece of super-hard metal as if it were rubber.

15 children from around Europe were tested along with him.

Everything that Stanford did to test Mr. Geller they also did with the children, and these kids could do everything he could do.

So if this was a trick, then 15 children were also "advanced magicians," and Stanford Research Institute, with all their scientific magic, could not detect fraud.

This test and the rest of the research from Stanford were printed in Nature magazine in its October 1974 issue.
